Dear Valued Customer:

Con Edison wants to make sure that we can always provide safe and reliable electricity service as the demand for energy grows. By improving and maintaining our extensive distribution infrastructure and securing the best available energy supply, we work around-the-clock to ensure the power is there for you.

Customers in selected communities in the New York City borough of Staten Island can help us to continue to provide reliable power by using less electricity during peak periods of demand. To assist in achieving this reduction, Con Edison, after going through a competitive selection process, entered into contracts with energy management companies, including Free Lighting Corporation (FLC). FLC may approach you and others in your community to negotiate arrangements under which energy-saving equipment will be installed by them at your premises.

Although we encourage you to install energy-saving equipment, doing so is strictly voluntary. Further, any contracts or arrangements that you make with FLC and/or its subcontractors with regard to energy-saving equipment will be between you and those respective companies rather than with Con Edison. Accordingly, Con Edison will have no responsibility relating to those contracts or arrangements and makes no promise, warranty or representation with regard to the installation, operation or effectiveness (including any energy-or-cost-savings aspects) of the equipment.

If you should have any questions about this important program, please contact us at DSM@coned.com
